LAMORAK INSURANCE CO., et al.

CIVIL ACTION CASE NO. 20-95

 04/27/2020

NANNETTE JOLIVETTE BROWN, CHIEF JUDGE,
 UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

SECTION: "G"(1)

ORDER AND REASONS

*1 Before the Court is Defendant Huntington Ingalls Incorporated (f/k/a Northrop Grumman Shipbuilding, Inc., f/k/a Northrop Grumman Ship Systems, Inc., f/k/a Avondale Industries, Inc., and f/k/a Avondale Shipyards, Inc.) ("Avondale") "Motion for Partial Summary Judgment on Plaintiffs' Intentional Tort, Fraud and Concealment Claims."¹ In this litigation, Plaintiffs Louise Ella Simon Dempster, Tanna Faye Dempster, Steven Louis Dempster, Janet Dempster Martinez, Marla Dempster Loupe, Callen Dempster, Jr., Annette Dempster Glad, and Barnett Dempster's (collectively, "Plaintiffs") allege that Decedent Callen L. Dempster ("Decedent") was exposed to asbestos and asbestos-containing products that were designed, manufactured, sold, and/or supplied by a number of Defendant companies while Decedent was employed by Avondale.² In the instant motion, Avondale argues that Plaintiffs' intentional tort survival claims should be dismissed because Plaintiffs cannot show that Avondale either (1) consciously desired that Decedent contract lung cancer or (2) knew that Decedent's lung cancer was substantially certain to occur.³ Having considered the motion, the memoranda in support and in opposition, the record, and the applicable law, the Court denies the motion.

I. Background

A. Factual Background

In this litigation, Plaintiffs allege that Decedent was employed by Avondale from 1962 to 1994.⁴ During that time, Plaintiffs aver that Decedent was exposed to asbestos and asbestos-containing products in various locations and work sites, resulting in Decedent breathing in asbestos fibers and later developing asbestos-related cancer.⁵ Plaintiffs assert strict liability and negligence claims against various Defendants.⁶ Specifically, Plaintiffs allege that:

All asbestos companies had care, custody, and control of the asbestos, which asbestos was defective and which presented an unreasonable risk of harm, which asbestos resulted in the injury of [Decedent] and for which these defendants are liable under Louisiana law. However, with regard to Avondale and its executive officers, they are liable because they failed to properly handle and control the asbestos which was in their care, custody, and control. Petitioners are not alleging that Avondale and its executive officers are liable for the mere use of asbestos; rather, Avondale and its executive officers are liable for the misuse of asbestos, including but not limited to the failure to warn of the hazardous nature and dangers of asbestos and for the failure to take and implement reasonably safe and industrial hygiene measures, failure to train, and failure to adopt safety procedures for the safe installation and removal of asbestos.⁷

B. Procedural Background

*2 Decedent filed a "Petition for Damages" in the Civil District Court for the Parish of Orleans, State of Louisiana, on March 14, 2018.⁸ Defendants Huntington Ingalls Incorporated, Albert Bossier, Jr., J. Melton Garret, and Lamorak Insurance Company (the "Avondale Interests") removed the case to the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana for the first time on June 21, 2018.⁹ In the first notice of removal, Avondale Interests alleged that removal was proper because this is an action “for or relating to conduct under color of federal office commenced in a state court against persons acting under one or more federal officers within the meaning of 28 U.S.C. § 1442(a)(1).”¹⁰

On January 7, 2019, this Court remanded the case to the Civil District Court for the Parish of Orleans.¹¹ The Court found that Defendants presented no evidence that Decedent came into contact with asbestos aboard a government vessel, and thus, no federal interest was implicated.¹² Alternatively, even accepting Defendants’ argument that Decedent came into contact with asbestos aboard a government vessel as true, the Court did not find that the necessary causal nexus existed between Federal Government action and Decedent’s claims.¹³ This determination was based on the fact that Decedent brought negligence claims, rather than strict liability claims, against Avondale Interests.¹⁴ Defendants did not appeal the January 7, 2019 Order.

Decedent passed away on November 24, 2018, and a First Supplemental and Amending Petition for Damages was filed in state court substituting Decedent’s heirs as Plaintiffs on January 17, 2019.¹⁵ Trial was scheduled to begin before the state trial court on January 13, 2020.¹⁶ The amended petition does not purport to assert any strict liability claims against Avondale.¹⁷

On January 9, 2020, Avondale removed the case to the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana for a second time.¹⁸ In the second notice of removal, Avondale once again alleged that removal is proper because this is an action “for or relating to conduct under color of federal office commenced in a state court against persons acting under one or more federal officers within the meaning of 28 U.S.C. § 1442(a)(1).”¹⁹ In the second notice of removal, Avondale contended that the jury interrogatories, jury charges, and Pre-Trial Order filed by Plaintiffs in state court directly contradicted Decedent’s prior representation in federal court that he was not asserting strict liability claims against Avondale.²⁰ On January 10, 2020, Plaintiffs filed an “Emergency Motion to Remand”²¹ and an “Ex Parte Motion for Expedited Hearing and for Emergency Ruling.”²²

On January 28, 2020, the Court denied the motion to remand, finding that this case was properly removed to this Court under the federal officer removal statute.²³ Specifically, the Court found that the notice of removal was timely filed and Plaintiffs’ pretrial filings constituted a proper basis for the second removal.²⁴ Additionally, the Court found that Avondale met the three-part test for federal officer removal, namely, that (1) Avondale is a person within the meaning of the statute, (2) Avondale acted pursuant to a federal officer’s directions and a causal nexus exists between its actions under color of federal office and plaintiffs’ claims, and (3) Avondale has a colorable federal defense to Plaintiffs’ claims under the government contractor immunity defense.²⁵

*3 On February 18, 2020, Avondale filed the instant “Motion for Partial Summary Judgment on Plaintiffs’ Intentional Tort, Fraud and Concealment Claims.”²⁶ On March 3, 2020, Plaintiffs filed an opposition to the instant motion.²⁷ Avondale, with leave of Court, filed a reply brief in further support of the motion on March 16, 2020.²⁸ At the request of the parties, the Court heard oral argument on this motion on March 11, 2020 at 2:00 p.m.²⁹

II. Parties’ Arguments

A. Avondale’s Argument in Support of the Motion

In the instant motion, Avondale argues that Plaintiffs’ intentional tort survival claims should be dismissed because Plaintiffs cannot show that Avondale either (1) consciously desired that Decedent contract lung cancer or (2) knew that Decedent’s lung cancer was substantially certain to occur.³⁰ Additionally, Avondale argues that Plaintiffs’ intentional tort wrongful death claims should be dismissed because Plaintiffs have no evidence that Avondale specifically intended for Decedent to contract, and die from, lung cancer.³¹

First, Avondale contends that under Louisiana law, to prevail on an intentional tort claim a plaintiff must show either: (1) that the defendant consciously desired the result or (2) that the defendant knew that the result was substantially certain to follow from its conduct.³² Avondale contends that Plaintiffs have no evidence to satisfy either prong.³³ Regarding the first prong, Avondale argues that there is no evidence that Avondale consciously desired for Decedent to contract lung cancer and die.³⁴ Avondale contends that the Louisiana

Supreme Court has previously identified allegations which do not qualify as intentional tort allegations, including the failure to provide a safe working environment.³⁵ Avondale argues that Plaintiffs' allegations fall within these previously identified categories that were deemed insufficient to constitute an intentional tort claim.³⁶

Regarding the second prong, Avondale contends that Plaintiffs cannot show that Avondale knew that Decedent's lung cancer was substantially certain to follow from their conduct.³⁷ Avondale argues that the "substantial certainty" test is not satisfied, even if the employer believes that an individual may, or even probably will, be injured by a workplace practice.³⁸ Avondale contends that here, "[P]laintiffs' evidence consists of a misguided attempt to equate Avondale's knowledge that asbestos was hazardous with an intent that [Decedent] contract a disease."³⁹ Furthermore, Avondale argues that the "substantial certainty" prong is not satisfied by the mere knowledge of the hazards of asbestos.⁴⁰ Avondale contends that Plaintiffs cannot show that Decedent's contraction of lung cancer was the inevitable result of his exposure to asbestos, particularly considering Decedent's history of smoking.⁴¹ Therefore, Avondale argues that Plaintiffs do not meet the "substantial certainty" prong of the intentional tort standard.⁴²

Next, Avondale contends that district judges in the Eastern District of Louisiana and other Louisiana state courts have dismissed similar intentional tort claims against Avondale as a matter of law.⁴³ Avondale argues that the conduct alleged by Plaintiffs—including the failure to provide a safe place to work, the failure to provide hazard warnings, the failure to provide protective equipment and other safety measures and the failure to conduct air monitoring—is the same type of conduct that other courts have rejected as insufficient to constitute an intentional tort.⁴⁴ Avondale contends that an intentional tort claim against it must fail because there is no evidence to support a claim that Avondale intended to injure its employees.⁴⁵

*4 Additionally, Avondale argues that Plaintiff's fraud and concealment claims are intentional torts, and are therefore governed by the same standard discussed above—that the defendant consciously desired the injury or believed with substantial certainty that the injury would occur.⁴⁶ Avondale contends that "[t]he basic elements of a cause of action for fraud are: '(1) a misrepresentation, suppression, or omission of true information; (2) the intent to obtain an unjust advantage or to cause damage or inconvenience to the other party; and (3) the resulting error must relate to a circumstance substantially influencing the other party's contractual consent.'"⁴⁷ Therefore, Avondale argues that here, Plaintiffs must show that (1) Avondale represented to Decedent that asbestos was safe, or (2) that Avondale suppressed information from Decedent, or (3) that Decedent was persuaded to accept employment with Avondale based on Avondale representations regarding asbestos.⁴⁸ Avondale contends that Plaintiffs will be unable to offer evidence to support a claim of fraud and concealment.⁴⁹

Lastly, Avondale argues that Plaintiffs' wrongful death claims should be dismissed.⁵⁰ Avondale contends that the Longshore and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act ("LHWCA") has an exclusive remedy provision that eliminates all other causes of action, except for a narrow, judicially created intentional tort exception.⁵¹ Specifically, Avondale contends that under the LHWCA, the defendant must show a specific intent to injure the employee.⁵² Here, Avondale argues that Plaintiffs' allegations constitute mere negligence and are therefore insufficient to satisfy the specific intent exception to the LHWCA.⁵³ Therefore, Avondale argues that Plaintiffs cannot carry their summary judgment burden.⁵⁴

B. Plaintiffs' Argument in Opposition to the Motion

In the opposition memorandum, Plaintiffs argue that the motion should be denied.⁵⁵ First, Plaintiffs argue that this motion was already denied by the state court trial judge.⁵⁶ Plaintiffs contend that the Court should only reconsider motions sparingly, where, for example, there exists newly discovered evidence or a change in the law.⁵⁷ Because those conditions do not exist here, Plaintiffs argue that the motion should be denied on that basis alone.⁵⁸ In response to Avondale's argument that various district courts have granted motions for summary judgment in similar circumstances, Plaintiffs contend that those cases are factually distinguishable from the case here.⁵⁹

Next, Plaintiffs argue that a motion for summary judgment is inappropriate where the case turns on intent or knowledge, because those determinations are inherently a question of fact which turns on credibility.⁶⁰ Additionally, Plaintiffs contend that the Fifth Circuit has recognized that intent is established where an employer continues to expose an employee to a toxic substance while that employee was already suffering from a lung disease.⁶¹ Plaintiffs argue that there is ample evidence which shows that the conduct of the Avondale caused Decedent to be exposed to asbestos.⁶² Furthermore, Plaintiffs contend that summary judgment is not appropriate on an intentional tort claim.⁶³ Plaintiffs argue that Avondale's reliance on Zimko v. American Cyanamid is misplaced because that case involved a decision after a trial on the merits.⁶⁴

*5 Plaintiffs contend that under Louisiana law, the intent required is not necessarily hostile, but merely an intent to bring about a result which will invade the interests of another in a way that the law forbids.⁶⁵ Responding to Avondale's argument that Plaintiffs' wrongful death claims are governed by the LHWCA standard, Plaintiffs argue that they have elected Louisiana state law remedies, rather than worker's compensation benefits, and that therefore, the LHWCA does not preempt plaintiffs' state law claims.⁶⁶

Plaintiffs contend that Avondale and its executive officers knew of the hazards of asbestos and were substantially certain that disease would occur.⁶⁷ Plaintiffs argue that Danny Joyce, Avondale's corporate representative and industrial hygiene expert, confirmed that Avondale had knowledge of government regulations as early as the 1940s of the dangers associated with asbestos.⁶⁸ Specifically, Plaintiffs contend that Minimum Standards requirements show that the Avondale executive officers knew of the dangers of asbestos, as well as the safety controls necessary to protect workers, as early as the 1940s.⁶⁹ Plaintiffs argue that Ollie Gatlin, a former Avondale executive, stated that he knew that asbestos was a health hazard in 1960.⁷⁰

Plaintiffs contend that Avondale executive officers were substantially certain that disease would occur.⁷¹ Plaintiffs argue that Burnette Bordelon, the superintendent for insulation at Avondale, disregarded the health hazards of asbestos and therefore, failed to take the precautions necessary to protect workers from exposure to asbestos.⁷² Plaintiffs contend that despite the fact that Avondale's executive officers were aware of the hazards of working with asbestos, they forced Avondale employees to work with and around asbestos without precautions.⁷³ Plaintiffs argue that C. Edwin Hartzman, the President of Avondale Shipyards beginning in 1972, testified that responsibility for safety initiatives ultimately rested with the other executive officers.⁷⁴ Furthermore, Plaintiffs contend that Edward Blanchard, Superintendent of the Production Department, also confirmed that he would have to approve a request from the safety department to stop production for safety reasons.⁷⁵ Plaintiffs argue that Albert Bossier, Jr., the assistant superintendent of the Electrical Department from approximately 1961 until he took over as superintendent in 1964, had knowledge of the dangers associated with asbestos and did nothing to protect Avondale employees.⁷⁶ Plaintiffs contend that James O'Donnell, Steven Kennedy, Peter Territo, George Kelmell, John McCue and Ewing Moore were all involved in the safety department at Avondale.⁷⁷ Plaintiffs argue that each was aware of the health hazards of asbestos.⁷⁸ Plaintiffs argue that from 1970 to 1972, the safety department reported to Hettie Dawes Eaves, who was involved in numerous discussions about the problems connected with exposure to asbestos.⁷⁹ Plaintiffs contend that Dr. Mabey, a contract physician for Avondale Shipyards, admitted that he knew of the hazards of asbestos since the 1940's.⁸⁰

*6 Lastly, Plaintiffs contend that they can establish a fraud claim under Louisiana law.⁸¹ Plaintiffs argue that Louisiana law recognizes a cause of action for fraud resulting from silence.⁸² Here, Plaintiffs contend that Avondale and its executive officers were aware of the hazards of asbestos and nevertheless, remained silent.⁸³

C. Avondale's Argument in Further Support of the Motion

In further support of the instant motion, Avondale argues that knowledge of the dangers of asbestos does not establish an intent for Decedent to contract lung cancer.⁸⁴ Avondale contends that while Plaintiffs have presented evidence of knowledge of hazards, that evidence does not constitute intent to harm.⁸⁵ Furthermore, Avondale argues that Plaintiffs' remaining evidence does not show that Avondale was substantially certain that Decedent would contract lung cancer.⁸⁶ For example, Avondale contends that even non-compliance with government standards does not rise to the level of an intentional tort.⁸⁷ Next, Avondale argues that resolution at the summary judgment stage is appropriate, even though intent is at issue, given Louisiana case law.⁸⁸ Additionally, Avondale contends that reconsideration principles are not applicable here, and if they are applicable, the motion is necessary to correct a manifest error of law because the state court did not consider the Orders of other district judges in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana on this issue.⁸⁹ Lastly, Avondale argues that Plaintiffs cannot meet the intent requirement for the fraud/concealment claims or the substantial certain standard for the wrongful death claim.⁹⁰

III. Legal Standard

A. Legal Standard for Summary Judgment

Summary judgment is appropriate when the pleadings, the discovery, and any affidavits show that “there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.”⁹¹ When assessing whether a dispute as to any material fact exists, the court considers “all of the evidence in the record but refrains from making credibility determinations or weighing the evidence.”⁹² All reasonable inferences are drawn in favor of the nonmoving party, but “unsupported allegations or affidavits setting forth ‘ultimate or conclusory facts and conclusions of law’ are insufficient to either support or defeat a motion for summary judgment.”⁹³ If the record, as a whole, “could not lead a rational trier of fact to find for the non-moving party,” then no genuine issue of fact exists, and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.⁹⁴ The nonmoving party may not rest upon the pleadings, but must identify specific facts in the record and articulate the precise manner in which that evidence establishes a genuine issue for trial.⁹⁵

*7 The party seeking summary judgment always bears the initial responsibility of informing the court of the basis for its motion and identifying those portions of the record that it believes demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue of material fact.⁹⁶ Thereafter, the nonmoving party should “identify specific evidence in the record, and articulate” precisely how that evidence supports his claims.⁹⁷ To withstand a motion for summary judgment, the nonmoving party must show that there is a genuine issue for trial by presenting evidence of specific facts.⁹⁸ The nonmovant’s burden of demonstrating a genuine issue of material fact is not satisfied merely by creating “some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts,” “by conclusory allegations,” by “unsubstantiated assertions,” or “by only a scintilla of evidence.”⁹⁹ Rather, a factual dispute precludes a grant of summary judgment only if the evidence presented by the nonmovant is sufficient to permit a reasonable trier of fact to find for the nonmoving party.¹⁰⁰ Further, a court “resolve[s] factual controversies in favor of the nonmoving party, but only when there is an actual controversy, that is, when both parties have submitted evidence of contradictory facts.”¹⁰¹ Hearsay evidence and unsworn documents that cannot be presented in a form that would be admissible in evidence at trial do not qualify as competent opposing evidence.¹⁰² Ultimately, summary judgment is appropriate in any case “where critical evidence is so weak or tenuous on an essential fact that it could not support a judgment in favor of the nonmovant.”¹⁰³

B. Legal Standard for Reconsideration

Although the Fifth Circuit has noted that the Federal Rules “do not recognize a ‘motion for reconsideration’ in haec verba,”¹⁰⁴ it has consistently recognized that such a motion may challenge a judgment or order under Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 54\(b\), 59\(e\), or 60\(b\).¹⁰⁵ Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 59\(e\) also allows courts to alter or amend its judgments after entry. The Court has “considerable discretion” in deciding whether to grant a motion for reconsideration, but must “strike the proper balance between two competing imperatives: (1) finality and (2) the need to render just decisions on the basis of all the facts.”¹⁰⁶ This Court’s discretion is further bounded by the Fifth Circuit’s instruction that reconsideration is “an extraordinary remedy that should be used sparingly,”¹⁰⁷ with relief being warranted only when the basis for relief is “clearly establish[ed].”¹⁰⁸ Courts in the Eastern District of Louisiana have generally considered four factors in deciding motions for reconsideration under the Rule 59\(e\) standard:

- (1) the motion is necessary to correct a manifest error of law or fact upon which the judgment is based;
- (2) the movant presents newly discovered or previously unavailable evidence;
- (3) the motion is necessary in order to prevent manifest injustice; or

(4) the motion is justified by an intervening change in controlling law.¹⁰⁹

A motion for reconsideration, “ [is] not the proper vehicle for rehashing evidence, legal theories, or arguments.... ”¹¹⁰ Instead, such motions “serve the narrow purpose of allowing a party to correct manifest errors of law or fact or to present newly discovered evidence.”¹¹¹ “It is well settled that motions for reconsideration should not be used...to re-urge matters that have already been advanced by a party.”¹¹² When there exists no independent reason for reconsideration other than mere disagreement with a prior order, reconsideration is a waste of judicial time and resources and should not be granted.¹¹³

IV. Analysis

A. Whether Avondale is Entitled to Reconsideration

*8 Avondale requests reconsideration of the state court’s order denying Avondale’s motion for partial summary judgment.¹¹⁴ While Avondale maintains that it would have appealed the decision of the Civil District Court had the case not been removed, Avondale has not presented any newly discovered or previously unavailable evidence, nor does Avondale identify a change of law that would warrant granting the motion.¹¹⁵ In its reply memorandum, Avondale contends that reconsideration principles are not applicable here, but cites no authority in support of that conclusion.¹¹⁶ In the alternative, Avondale argues that if reconsideration principles are applicable, this motion is necessary to correct a manifest error of law because the state court did not consider the Orders of other district judges in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana on this issue.¹¹⁷ Avondale points to Vedros v. Northrop Grumman Shipbuilding Inc. et al., in which another section of this Court granted summary judgment in an allegedly similar case.¹¹⁸

The Court must first determine the proper procedure to follow in resolving a motion for reconsideration of a state court’s order denying a motion for summary before the case was removed to federal court. Namely, the Court must determine what degree of deference is owed to an interlocutory state court order once a case has been removed to federal court. After removal of an action to federal district court, “[a]ll injunctions, orders, and other proceedings had in such action prior to its removal shall remain in full force and effect until dissolved or modified by the [federal] district court.”¹¹⁹ The Fifth Circuit addressed this issue in Nissho-Iwai American Corp. v. Kline.¹²⁰ There, a Texas state court granted a plaintiff’s motion to strike a defendant’s defenses and counterclaims before the case was removed to federal court.¹²¹ In addressing the issue of deference, the Fifth Circuit concluded that where “the state court’s ruling is purely interlocutory, it remains subject to reconsideration just as it had been prior to removal.”¹²² The Fifth Circuit reasoned that “judicial economy is served by eliminating the need for duplicative proceedings in federal court.”¹²³ However, the Fifth Circuit held that federal procedure rather than state procedure governs the manner in which the state court decision is to be enforced.¹²⁴ “In sum, whenever a case is removed, interlocutory state court orders are transformed by operation of 28 U.S.C. § 1450 into orders of the federal district court to which the action is removed. The district court is thereupon free to treat the order as it would any such interlocutory order it might itself have entered.”¹²⁵

The Fifth Circuit addressed the specific issue of a state court deciding a motion for summary judgment and a subsequent removal to federal court in Resolution Trust Corp. v. Northpark Joint Venture.¹²⁶ There, the Fifth Circuit held that a “prior state court order in essence is federalized when the action is removed to federal court, although the order ‘remains subject to reconsideration just as it had been prior to removal.’ ”¹²⁷ In other words, the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure govern the enforcement of a prior state court ruling in a case removed to federal court.¹²⁸ Therefore, where the prior state court order was decided on summary judgment, the federal court must ensure that the order is consistent with the requirements of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56.¹²⁹ “If the federal court declines to reconsider the state court summary judgment, then the federal court certifies that the order is indeed consistent with Rule 56\(c\).”¹³⁰ “The standard of review is the same as if the federal court itself had entered the order...”¹³¹

*9 The Fifth Circuit’s opinions in Nissho-Iwai American Corp. and Resolution Trust Corp. show that (1) when a case is removed from state court, all orders of the state court remain in full force and effect and (2) once removed, federal procedure governs the manner of enforcement of the state court order.¹³² When this case was removed to federal court, the state court had denied Avondale's motion for summary judgment.¹³³ Here, as in Nissho-Iwai American Corp. and Resolution Trust Corp., the order entered by the state court is an interlocutory order.¹³⁴ The Fifth Circuit instructs federal district courts to treat interlocutory state court orders as orders of the federal district court to which the action is removed. The district court may treat the state court order as it would any interlocutory order it might itself have entered. Specifically, when the state court order is on summary judgment, the federal district court may decline to reconsider the state court's order if the federal court certifies that the order is indeed consistent with Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56\(c\).

Here, Avondale has not shown any substantial reasons warranting reconsideration of the state court's ruling. Furthermore, for the reasons that follow, even if the Court were considering this motion for the first time under the summary judgment standard rather than the reconsideration standard, there are genuine issues of material fact in dispute precluding summary judgment.

B. Whether Avondale is Entitled to Summary Judgment on Plaintiffs' Intentional Tort Claims

As an initial matter, the Court notes that generally, summary judgment is disfavored when issues of intent or state of mind are involved because those determinations are inherently a question of fact which turns on credibility.¹³⁵ However, a court is not precluded from granting summary judgment where elusive concepts such as motive or intent are at issue.¹³⁶ But the Fifth Circuit has cautioned that "the court must be vigilant to draw every reasonable inference from the evidence in the record in a light most flattering to the nonmoving party."¹³⁷ For example, summary judgment may still be appropriate when intent or state of mind is at issue if the non-moving party merely rests on conclusory allegations or unsupported speculation.¹³⁸ As will be explained below, this is not such a case.

To prove that a defendant committed an intentional tort under Louisiana law, a plaintiff must show that a defendant either " (1) consciously desires the physical result of his act, whatever the likelihood of that result happening from his conduct; or (2) knows that the result is substantially certain to follow from his conduct, whatever his desire may be as to that result." ¹³⁹ "Thus, intent has reference to the consequences of an act rather than to the act itself."¹⁴⁰ Therefore, Plaintiffs must prove that Avondale either consciously desired that Decedent would contract lung cancer, or knew that result was "substantially certain to follow from [their] conduct."¹⁴¹ Plaintiffs do not address the first prong, but instead argue that Avondale and its executive officers knew of the hazards of asbestos and were substantially certain that disease would occur.¹⁴²

*10 Substantial certainty "requires more than a reasonable probability that an injury will occur."¹⁴³ To satisfy the criterion of "substantial certainty," Plaintiffs must prove that Decedent's contracting lung cancer was "inevitable or incapable of failing."¹⁴⁴ "[M]ere knowledge and appreciation of a risk does not constitute intent, nor does reckless or wanton conduct."¹⁴⁵ The "belie[f] that someone may, or even probably will, eventually get hurt if a workplace practice is continued does not rise to the level of intentional tort, but instead falls within the range of negligent acts..."¹⁴⁶ To prove a claim for intentional tort, Plaintiffs would have to show that Avondale's "conduct [went] beyond knowingly permitting a hazardous work condition to exist, ordering an employee to perform an extremely dangerous job, or willfully failing to furnish a safe place to work..."¹⁴⁷

Here, there are questions of fact in dispute regarding whether Avondale knew that it was substantially certain that Decedent would contract lung cancer. Plaintiffs have presented evidence to show that Avondale and its executive officers knew of the hazards of asbestos. For example, Plaintiffs present the deposition of Danny Joyce, Avondale's corporate representative and industrial hygiene expert, who confirmed that Avondale had knowledge of government regulations of asbestos as early as the 1940s.¹⁴⁸ Plaintiffs submit the deposition of Ollie Gatlin, a former Avondale executive, who stated that he knew that asbestos was a health hazard in 1960.¹⁴⁹ Plaintiffs attach the deposition of C. Edwin Hartzman, the President of Avondale Shipyards beginning in 1972, who testified that responsibility for safety initiatives ultimately rested with the other executive officers.¹⁵⁰ Plaintiffs attach the deposition of Edward Blanchard, Superintendent of the Production Department, who also confirmed that he would have to approve a request from the safety department to stop production for safety reason.¹⁵¹ Plaintiffs also attach deposition testimony which shows that several individuals involved in the safety department at Avondale were aware of the health hazards of asbestos.¹⁵² Plaintiffs attach the deposition of Dr. Mabey, a contract physician for Avondale Shipyards, who admitted that he knew of the hazards of asbestos since the 1940s.¹⁵³

Based on the evidence presented by Plaintiffs, the Court finds that Avondale and its executives knew of the hazards of asbestos. As to the criterion of “substantial certainty,” the Court finds that genuine issues of material fact remain as to whether it was substantially certain that Decedent would contract lung cancer; therefore, summary judgment is denied. In particular, the Fifth Circuit has repeatedly held that summary judgment is generally disfavored when issues of intent or state of mind are involved because those determinations are inherently a question of fact which turns on credibility.¹⁵⁴ Here, the Court cannot determine at the summary judgment stage whether Avondale was substantially certain that Decedent would contract lung cancer based on its conduct. This is not a case in which the non-moving party merely rests on conclusory allegations or unsupported speculation. Because genuine issues of material fact remain, this matter cannot be resolved on summary judgment.

C. Whether Avondale is Entitled to Summary Judgment on Plaintiffs’ Fraud Claims

*11 In Louisiana, the elements of a claim for fraud are: (1) a misrepresentation of a material fact, (2) made with the intent to deceive, and (3) causing justifiable reliance with resultant injury.¹⁵⁵ Therefore, in order to succeed on a tort claim for fraud, Plaintiffs must prove that (1) Avondale misrepresented a material fact, (2) with the intent to deceive, and (3) caused justifiable reliance and resultant injury.¹⁵⁶ Under Louisiana law, fraud may result from silence or inaction.¹⁵⁷ However, “[i]n order to find fraud from silence or suppression of the truth, there must exist a duty to speak or disclose information...And while fraud may indeed result from a party’s silence or inaction, mere silence or inaction without fraudulent intent does not constitute fraud. Fraudulent intent, or the intent to deceive, is a necessary and inherent element of fraud.”¹⁵⁸

As discussed above, Plaintiffs have presented evidence to show that Avondale and its executive officers were aware of the hazards of asbestos and remained silent or did not act. Furthermore, the Fifth Circuit has repeatedly held that summary judgment is generally disfavored when issues of intent or state of mind are involved because those determinations are inherently a question of fact which turns on credibility.¹⁵⁹ Here, the Court cannot determine at the summary judgment stage whether Avondale intended to deceive Decedent. Accordingly, summary judgment is inappropriate at this stage.

D. Whether Avondale is Entitled to Summary Judgment as to Wrongful Death Claims

Avondale argues that Plaintiffs’ wrongful death claims should be dismissed because they are governed by the Longshore and Harbor Workers’ Compensation Act (“LHWCA”).¹⁶⁰ Avondale argues that, pursuant to Louisiana Revised Statute § 23:1035.2, workers’ compensation under the LHWCA is a Louisiana employee’s sole remedy.¹⁶¹ In opposition, Plaintiffs argue that they have elected Louisiana state law remedies, rather than worker’s compensation benefits, and that therefore, the LHWCA does not preempt Plaintiffs’ state law claims.¹⁶²

While “the LHWCA does not have a specific provision expressly stating that an employer’s intentional tort is an exception to the statute’s ‘exclusive remedy’ provision...a number of court decisions, from Louisiana and from other jurisdictions, have stated that an employer’s intentional tort is an exception to the exclusive remedy provision of the LHWCA and that, in such cases, the employee may bring a tort action against the employer.”¹⁶³ However, those courts “strictly...applied the exception for intentional torts.”¹⁶⁴ For example, “[n]othing short of a specific intent to injure the employee falls outside of the scope of the [LHWCA].”¹⁶⁵ Therefore, a plaintiff must show that the defendant had a specific intent to injure the plaintiff.

*12 As discussed above, Plaintiffs have presented evidence to show that Avondale and its executive officers were aware of the hazards of asbestos. Furthermore, the Fifth Circuit has repeatedly held that summary judgment is generally disfavored when issues of intent or state of mind are involved because those determinations are inherently a question of fact which turns on credibility.¹⁶⁶ Here, the Court cannot determine at the summary judgment stage whether Avondale had a specific intent to injure Decedent. Accordingly, summary judgment is inappropriate at this stage.

V. Conclusion

For the reasons discussed above, Avondale’s motion for summary judgment is denied. Avondale has not shown any substantial reasons warranting reconsideration of the state court’s ruling. Furthermore, even if the Court were considering this motion for the first time under the summary judgment standard rather than the reconsideration standard, there are genuine issues of material fact regarding whether Avondale knew that it was substantially certain that Decedent would contract lung cancer. Plaintiffs have provided evidence to show that Avondale and its executive officers knew of the hazards of asbestos. The Fifth Circuit has repeatedly held that summary judgment is generally disfavored when issues of intent or state of mind are involved because those determinations are inherently a question of fact which turns on credibility. Here, the Court cannot determine at the summary judgment stage whether Avondale was substantially certain that Decedent would contract lung cancer based on its conduct.

Accordingly, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that Avondale’s “Motion for Partial Summary Judgment on Plaintiffs’ Intentional Tort, Fraud and Concealment Claims”¹⁶⁷ is DENIED.

 25 Id. at 23–36. The January 28, 2020 Order also predated the Fifth Circuit’s en banc decision in Latiolais. In Latiolais, the Fifth Circuit held that “to remove under section 1442\(a\), a defendant must show (1) it has asserted a colorable federal defense, (2) it is a “person” within the meaning of the statute, (3) that has acted pursuant to a federal officer’s directions, and (4) the charged conduct is connected or associated with an act pursuant to a federal officer’s directions.” 951 F.3d at 296. The Fifth Circuit overruled prior caselaw applying the “causal nexus” requirement to Section 1442\(a\) as amended in 2011. Id.
